Overview

You are invited to submit proposals for educational presentations during the 2019 Indiana Infectious Disease Summit on November 20-21, 2019 in Indianapolis. The Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH) is committed to strengthening infectious disease prevention and response and fostering collaboration to protect the health of all Hoosiers. We encourage individuals working in infectious disease-related fields to submit abstracts for consideration that address the conference theme United in Prevention, Response, and Service.

Proposals should be timely and focused on original program activities and research related to infectious disease prevention, response, and partnerships. The abstract should note if the findings advance current research or practice and describe any innovative approaches, concepts or methodologies, especially related to interdisciplinary collaboration to reduce the burden of infectious disease in Indiana.

Following attendance at the 2019 Indiana Infectious Disease Summit, participants will be able to:

- Understand trends and responses to current and emerging infectious diseases
- Discuss the implementation of epidemiology preparedness to prevent and mitigate infectious disease
- List three new partnerships to enhance infectious disease prevention and response

Each planned session during the conference is in pursuit of these objectives and is a primary time when professionals in public health, laboratory, health care, and other sectors can interact, network, and share ideas.

Questions may be directed to Lauren Milroy at lmilroy@isdh.in.gov.
